PERSPECTIVES

What do you feel is the most important issue facing the accounting profession today?

Talent and succession is the most important issue currently facing the profession. This is not a new issue, but it has been exacerbated by the ripple effect of the pandemic. There is a lot of focus on finding more people, but the bigger opportunity is around understanding what capacity is truly available, what roles and skills are needed for the future, looking beyond geographic limitations, and exploring outsourcing and automation. The biggest obstacle is mindset. This should all be seen as an opportunity instead of a challenge.

What one thing would you recommend accountants do to prepare for the future?

To prepare for the future, firms should emphasize an intentional and strategic focus on both employee and client experience. An exceptional experience doesn't happen by chance and is a differentiator in a competitive landscape. Employees want to feel valued from the very beginning of their time with the firm through their career journey. Clients deserve a consistent experience when working with the firm from the time when they are aware that they need a service through the decision-making process, onboarding, service delivery and follow up. As transactional and
